Q71 While the U.S. and Japan are now allies, this was not always the case. An important aspect of U.S.-Japan relations is the Treaty of Mutual Cooperation and Security. This bi-lateral agreement provides the United States with the right to military bases on the Japanese archipelago in exchange for a U.S. pledge to defend Japan if it is attacked. While the treaty obligates the U.S. to protect Japan in case of military attacks by another country, Japan does not have the same level of obligation to provide military support in case of U.S. warfare with other countries.
